I built a circuit and this is the end result of my circuit build. A few questions though, what am I doing wrong? Please explain in simple terms... I really am clueless on such matters and would really appreciate any and all help. A: @Hans is right, about this being a simulator. What you are seeing here, is the SC (Switch/Gates) waveform. The microprocessor does not actually output anything (image through output buffer). Its the buffer that is outputting this, so you see the actual layout of the bits being output. So, in the clear, you see the SC waveform, and in a graphical mode (graphical output), you see the layout of the bit stream. See also: Q: Multi levels of sticky navbar in angular I'm trying to replicate this sticky navbar demo found here: Basically the idea is you have a navbar with 3 visible levels - one at the top, one in the middle and one at the bottom. The issue i'm having is I can't make it so the middle level can be 'activated' - as it currently just shows in the default state and sits a top level.
