There is a need for accurate clinical prediction tools to assist decision-making for healthcare resource allocation and recovery planning. The aim of this systematic review was to assess the methodological quality of predictors of functional outcomes following stroke and to identify areas of poor reporting that may hinder the quality of these predictors. Data were systematically extracted from an electronic search of the following databases: Cochrane Central Register of Controlled Trials, MEDLINE, EMBASE and CINAHL. No date restrictions were used. Grey literature including thesis and conference abstracts was included. An updated search was run in January 2014. A total of 21 studies were included. Methodological quality was determined using the National Institutes of Health (NIH) Tool to Assess Quality in Cohort Studies and National Institute of Health and Clinical Excellence (NICE) Quality Assessment Tool for Clinical Prediction Studies. Two reviewers independently conducted the quality assessment and resolved any disagreements through consensus. Eleven variables were identified as being a predictor of functional outcomes. Most of the variables were poorly reported in terms of methodology. The quality of a large number of studies was very poor. There is a pressing need for a reliable evidence base to assist healthcare decision-makers to optimise the management of stroke patients to improve quality of life outcomes. Poor reporting hinders the quality assessment of studies. To improve the evidence base, the TRIPOD statement would help to improve the reporting quality of prognostic studies.Q: Drupal SmartCaptcha installation problem I installed Drupal with SmartCaptcha in admin settings and I did the following things: Turn on strict captcha Checked the database info to make sure that id number of the table 'captcha' is at least 32 and that the table has a checkbox for has_ssl_support Uploaded the image / captcha that I use I got this error: Smartcaptcha requires a SSL connection.
