Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a digital camera having a zoom lens capable of continuously moving a focal point from a wide-angle range to a telephoto range.

2. Description of the Related Art In a video camera that produces a moving image, the spread of a depth of field is important to producing clear images. Depth of field is the distance from a certain position to the nearest position at which a subject of a constant size can be made to appear as a similar size. In conventional video cameras, the wide-angle range of a zoom lens is set at about a width of two inches from the optical axis of the lens. For this reason, in video cameras having no electronic viewfinders, it is difficult to observe a wide subject, such as a mountain, to determine a composition, and a correction of the composition is relatively difficult. On the other hand, compact video cameras with electronic viewfinders tend to use a zoom lens having a short focal length, and are, therefore, used in a camera room or the like. However, since the camera room or the like is usually positioned in the center of a room or a town, the focal point of the zoom lens may not be always located at the center of the room or town. The focal distance of a zoom lens having a wide-angle range of about two inches is approximately 13.5 times the focal distance of a zoom lens having a middle-telephoto range of about one-half inch. As a result, the brightness of a subject, when observed through the zoom lens having a wide-angle range, is greater than the brightness of the subject when observed through the zoom lens having a middle-telephoto range. Thus, if the subject is observed in both cases, it is difficult to determine the difference between the bright subject and the dark subject. In order to prevent an increase in brightness of a subject, the brightness of a subject, when observed through the wide-angle range of the zoom lens, may be reduced. However, since the brightness of the subject is generally lowered when the brightness of the subject is lowered, the contrast between the subject and a background may be degraded. In addition, in order to accurately observe a subject from a very bff6bb2d33

Blocking Characters

Players are allowed to use limited actions (such as striking an enemy, performing a special technique, and using magic) in a turn, in addition to the gauge that fills up each time they attack an enemy. Thus, you are distracted by the latter and end up with a setback, which makes it harder to score a hit or to take advantage of the actions in the same attack. You can increase the gauge with light attack power and magic power is used to fill it. Once the limit is exceeded, you cannot attack again that turn. The limit of using actions depends on your battle level and the size of your attribute gauge. The limit for each gauge decreases depending on your battle level and on your attack power.

Blocking Characters

As soon as an enemy attacks you during that same hit streak, you activate your skill and protect yourself. You block based on your battle level and the size of your blocking gauge. If you fail to block, you cannot use actions and are hit.

Defense Characters

When you defend, you are given the chance to change the circumstances in your favor. You receive a shield or bonus resistance (called defense) to your chance of getting hit. The defense increases as your battle level increases and it increases as your battle level decreases.
