Battle of Coyan The Battle of Coyan occurred during the Argentinian War of Independence in Argentina, on February 13, 1874, near the town of Tucumán. Battle General José Félix Pérez commanded the Argentine Army of the North in his final campaign against Rosas. Pérez had taken control of Tucumán in early December 1873. His army crossed the Andes into Chile to attack the Chilean defenses in the Province of Coquimbo. On February 13, 1874, the Argentinian army entered the outskirts of the town of Coyan. They made brief clashes with the Chilean forces (about 500 men and 90 cavalry), and then started fighting the Chilean division of the Balmaceda military base, but was quickly defeated. By order of the brigadier general Pérez, the Army of the North was withdrawn. The next day the two Chilean divisions were attacked and defeated by the Chilean soldiers and the Chacabuco Cavalry Regiment, a division belonging to the Army of the Andes. The soldiers who were in the divisions of the Army of the Andes surrendered to the Chilean soldiers. Aftermath As a result of the battle, General José Félix Pérez was captured and imprisoned in the fortress of El Solar.
