Resetting ink levels in Epson printers Epson L100, L200, L800 Epson has been part of the global market of manufacturing and distributing printing technologies since 1885. Ever since, Epson has been increasingly known for producing reliable and durable printers while keeping cost down. Epson printers have a wide range of printer models that usually provide a higher level of printing performance as compared to other printers in their class. Epson has also been very strategic in offering useful and valuable tools and solutions that would enhance overall print experience. Epson's ink tanks are usually expected to have a few years of lifetime. However, the printing performance of Epson printers can significantly reduce when the ink level in an ink tank is depleted. Whenever an ink tank is totally empty, the printer may not be able to print successfully anymore. The printer manufacturer Epson provides its customers with automated systems that could keep an ink tank replenished. These automated systems are sometimes called as service tools. An Epson ink cartridge is a consumable item, meaning that it needs to be replaced or recharged regularly.

Field of the Invention The present invention pertains generally to wireless communication and, more particularly, to methods and apparatus for interconnecting wireless devices.

b. Background The field of wireless technology has grown substantially in recent years. Wireless service providers now provide services that communicate information over wireless networks between wireless devices (e.g., cell phones, wireless-enabled personal digital assistants, and the like). Moreover, many wireless service providers now provide push-to-talk capability for enhancing communication between the wireless devices. The push-to-talk capability allows one or more parties to the communication to communicate with another party in an "instant push" manner. In such a manner, an active talker can transition the communication channel to an instantaneously available talk-back party. For example, a user of a wireless device can instantaneously call an individual to communicate to the individual's cell phone. Further, the individual can place a call on hold (e.g., while attending a meeting) and, later, take the call off hold. In general, however, existing technologies only allow for communications between (i.e., between the cell phones of) parties using the same or nearly the same wireless service provider. That is, communications between parties using different wireless service providers are not conventionally enabled. Therefore, a need exists for methods and apparatus that allow for communications between parties using different wireless service providers. More particularly, a need exists for such methods and apparatus for instantaneously connecting wireless devices over wireless networks.
