What's new in Skydiving Simulator VR:

Member Hello. The above posting is of a kit built by Joseph Schofield in New Zealand. He has a small military painting box made from steel with 13 canvas compartments. An adapter with a depth tolerance of +/-20mm and a maximum depth of 210mm is included. The kit is a complete 1/48 scale Tiger II with no engine, foliage or cockpit. The kit looks rather thick and I didn't notice that there was a portrait bust made from plastic so the modeler has to drill holes for stand. Would it be possible to get a list of missing content from your many photos? Also, if we could get a comparison photo of the model that looks like the Waffen SS Schützen-Grenadier would be greatly appreciated. MarineBomber1 I have a slightly different version of the Tiger based upon the original instructions from Tiger Models, the board is a darker olive. There are some images of the kit on skidoo.org if you would like to see them. Battle Front The Tiger kit is based on the quite horrible Tiger I. Apart from a slimmer mounting plate, the build is identical. Reformation Aug 11, 2016 02:50PM Thanks for that Brent. We have seen the Tiger II bushmaster and Tiger II V3 and hopefully will get to compare these soon. Tiger Fighter Jun 22, 2016 09:16AM What's the harm in posting an a-z, isn't it? Maybe people can identify missing content. Thanks. Redwood Crabs Below is a brief history of the kit in response to your request So far the kit can only be said to be an all-in-one kit. It was clearly not made with the theory of building a complete example of the Tiger in mind. Instead there are a few issued parts that were likely taken from a Tiger III or IV tank and others that were taken from Tiger II parts and were mixed in. In other words the kit is far more like a kit of parts than a kit of instructions. The instructions are as follow. You can complete the build without any outside tools or time-consuming painting using the text on the instruction card. You can complete the kit within a day using only the text on the instructions card and a magnifying glass.
