Many online tutorials can be found on the Internet that teach Photoshop functions using Web sites such as www.gallery.lib.umn.edu/lesson1.html, www.gallery.lib.umn.edu/lesson2.html, and www.gallery.lib.umn.edu/lesson3.html. You can find free sample images online that you can use as a training set for beginning image editing in Adobe Photoshop. Photoshop also is available for Mac and Windows computers, making it both a valuable tool for pros and an accessible program for students and even beginners. Photoshop is packed with tools for creating raster images. It also has tools for creating vector images, such as creating paths or pen strokes. Digital images in these formats can then be manipulated with the same tools. In this chapter, you find out how to use these tools to create and manipulate your own images, as well as how to use these tools to create shapes and text. In addition, you find out how to use the tools to add artistic effects to images. In the next chapter, you find out about the slicing and dicing tools for creating new, interesting composites. After you get acquainted with these tools, you find out how to use them to create and manipulate a variety of types of images. By the end of this chapter, you understand how to work with basic image editing with layers and how to create selections, draw a selection, and perform other operations using the tools. This in turn enables you to perform advanced image-editing tasks with these tools, including manipulating the color of an image, creating new images from another image, creating selections to change the color of any part of an image, and more. Picking the Right Editor for You Adobe Photoshop is designed to be a beginner-level image-editing program. But the same program that's perfect for a beginner can be confusing to use for more-experienced users. So how do you know which tool to use? Q: Count the frequency of each letter in a word I have a string like this; alpha beta gamma alpha alpha gamma I want to count the frequency of each letters in the string so the result would be like this: alpha => 2 beta => 1 gamma => 1 How can I do it, here is my code that I'm using now: def letter_count(text): # Create a dictionary where key is alphabet characters alphabet = dict(chr(x) for x in range(ord('a'), ord('z')+1)) # Create a list of all characters in the text letters = text.split() # Loop through the letters and add their count to the dictionary for letter in letters: if letter in alphabet: alphabet[letter] += 1 # Return a sorted dictionary where the key are the letters return dict(sorted(alphabet.items(), key = lambda t: t[1], reverse = True)) However, it only counts the frequency of the first letter and not all the letters. Does anyone know how to do this? A: there are a lot of way to deal with that. One of the way can be doing it like that : import string data = "alpha beta gamma alpha alpha gamma" frequencies = dict.fromkeys(list(string.ascii_lowercase), 0) for word in data.split(): if word in frequencies: frequencies[word] += 1 print frequencies and you will get : {'alpha': 2, 'beta': 1, 'gamma': 1} Q: Simulating mouse events on a canvas Is there a way to simulate mouse events on a canvas element? I have a series of markers which are drawn on the canvas, and I want to be able to move them around as if I'm clicking on them with my mouse. I know you can do this if you are using flash, but I don
