Horseradish peroxidase (HRP) heme group structure was determined by X-ray diffraction analysis of crystalline HRP and HRP derivatives. Also, the molecular and electronic structure of the heme group was examined by using computational methods. The X-ray structure shows that the heme plane is tilted and rotated. Substitution of Tyr at position 2, 4, or 6 does not affect the heme ring and does not distort the $Fe-O_2$ redox potential. In the reduced state, the heme plane is not tilted, with a mean dihedral angle of approximately 90 degrees between the heme plane and the porphyrin macrocycle. The structure of the oxidized heme group is also nearly identical to that of native HRP, and no effects on the heme redox potential are observed. In the reduction
