[The first age groups in gerontology (part I). Premorbid conditions, the social situation and social integration]. As a result of demographic trends and the demographic structure of society, today the older people group, especially, represents the largest and potentially the most progressive group of society. In addition to the progressive elderly, society is faced with a number of challenges, the most important one being the demographic challenge, with the task of preserving the active population. Aging is a complex process with its own dynamics that, in addition to other "age processes", include, among other things, ontogenetic adaptation (individualisation and differentiation) and, after the termination of physical growth, psychosocial adaptation (social integration, re-integration into society, self-care and a new place in society). The present study is concerned with the socio-demographic composition of the "first age group" and its main and most important dynamic processes, focusing mainly on the impact of the aforementioned adaptation processes. As a result of the data on the population of the oldest age groups which were collected as a part of the pilot study of the National Institute for Social Research, the project "Age groups of Polish population", conducted in 2005 and 2006, and the results of the collected material, a number of the most important and determinant factors for successful adaptation to an aging society were identified. Q: Checkout Github for an example I'm new to java and learning java with RosettaCode.com. is one I found and it has tons of code to practice on. I've never used Git before, but I wanted to test it out with a simple project to get familiar with it. Can someone explain in simple steps how I would start a new repo and then what to do to start learning the code? I've got Java J2EE and knowledge of Java, although no experience with it. I tried checking out from Github and clicking a few things but I am at a loss. Someone pointed me to a tutorial at some point, but it was either very hard to find or very vague. I appreciate any answers! A: If you need an example: Open a Git/Github tool. Create a text file in your work space, save it with any name of your choice. Copy this text in Github. Don't worry about the name of the project now. Enter the text copied in the text file using notepad or a text editor of your choice. Paste it in github.com. Now you are in github.com now you should click to add files.
