● A New World of Fantasy Adventure The world of Elden, known as the Legend of the Elden Ring, is a region between two worlds of two different races: the Elden and the Culpeople. The continent of Elden is a land where there are various races and the true origin of which is unknown. A great danger, the threat of the gods, has fallen upon the land of Elden and threatens to destroy the world. These circumstances have converged to create a struggle that matches the power of the gods against their sworn enemies, the humans. In the continent of Elden, the land where the great threat has fallen upon, some who have come from outside have taken up arms against the gods of this land. Elden's unique and diverse citizens have gathered in various groups, and the reason for the goddesses's imminent fall is the creation of the ELDEN RING - the power of the goddesses themselves. As the first step to stopping the threat of the gods, the adventurers of these knights, army officers, a young girl, and many others are participating in the ELDEN RING. The curtain on the circle of the Great Gods, who have been in the middle of the struggle, is being raised, and the future of the world is in their hands. ● Various Creators Want to Bring the Game to Life Square Enix and the team at BIG, who are developing the FINAL FANTASY XV, will be taking part in the development of FINAL FANTASY XV ARCHNEMESIS COLLECTION. Hitomi Ohata, the planner from the development team of the FINAL FANTASY XV, on creating the world of Elden: "Although the world of the FINAL FANTASY series is a fantasy-themed world, it is very important that it has a sense of reality and has elements that can be familiar to people. A part of my home has a cracking problem, so I need to fix it. I would much prefer to do this right, instead of digging through drywall, but my electrician says they won't work on the wall, because it's an unreinforced concrete. I thought unreinforced concrete is supposed to be fireproof? Or can I just cover it with something like drywall, or silicone caulk? I'm mostly doing this because I want to use a cordless screw gun, and they don't seem to work with drywall, at least not well. Replies to This Question: Surrounding area and electrical run requirements are part of the building code. However, these are more of guidelines, and a good electrician can use whatever they feel best for the particular circumstance. In your case, you'll want to look into the electrical requirements for such a project. It'll be more likely to be approved if you use vinyl for the joist and other areas where standard drywall isn't allowed. For caulk, in most cases, it will be best to use something that has a high shear strength (and will hold up to curing out/moisture). Silicone and conformal caulk are not considered very durable. It may be OK for some applications, but in a construction like this, you may want to look at urethane-based latex. For shear strength, vinyl, even extruded and pressed for the steel framing material in the bay, has a much higher shear strength than drywall, so it can be used in areas that a regular drywall would be compromised. That said, the building code also covers fire resistant drywall in this case (in addition to the other requirements). Silicone-type caulks won't meet that either, and neither would other "backing" materials unless they're specifically designed for the application. As to the screw guns, there are many options, but I'd like to point out a couple of things. A professional applicator can use a non-corded screw gun such as InEco's, Allsteel's, etc. that works well in these circumstances. For screw guns, as with most things you use, if you can find a good one at a good price, you won't regret the investment. Another option would be to have the power shut off to the house for a few days. If you're lucky, the

In Canada, there is very limited support for one of the major areas which naturopathic medicine values: the promotion of natural health and lifestyle through education. In this survey, nurses recognized 4 themes as important to the development of naturopathic education: create and sustain an evidence-based, student-centered, holistic system of health education, abolish common stereotypes about naturopathy in order to educate students, specify requirements for entry into the profession, and engage community partners. Although they did not identify these themes in the original questionnaire, nurses are now evaluating naturopathic medicine within their own work environment and might be using these themes to strengthen their own programs. In this study, naturopathic medicine was broadly defined to include any of the indicated CCNM programs: naturopathic medicine, school of health science, natural health sciences, or family medicine. We did not define naturopathic medicine specifically, which provides an opportunity for other professions to utilize this model in their own programs. Thus, readers are cautioned that the findings of this survey may not be indicative of the entire naturopathic profession, and further research is needed to understand the extent to which naturopathic medicine is
