Dosimetric evaluation of radionuclide therapy with radioactive colloids in painful bone metastases. This study was performed to evaluate the optimum radiation dose to painful bone metastases and to investigate the influence of radionuclide therapy on normal tissues using radionuclide therapy with radioactive colloids. Thirty-five patients with painful bone metastases were randomly divided into 3 groups: radionuclide therapy with 32P (n = 14), radionuclide therapy with 186Re (n = 10), and an untreated group (control group, n = 11). We investigated the dose of radionuclide therapy that provided an effective reduction of pain, measured the activity of 32P and 186Re to the painful bone metastases, the activity in the blood and bone marrow, and the radiation dose to surrounding normal tissues using 99mTc-labeled methylene diphosphonate (99mTc-MDP) bone scintigraphy. The activity of 32P to the painful bone metastases was lower in the treatment groups than in the control group. The activity in the blood and bone marrow and the radiation dose to the surrounding normal tissues of the treatment groups were lower than in the control group. Treatment with radionuclide therapy is useful in painful bone metastases, but the dose of radionuclide therapy is restricted.Pawel Jackowski Paweł Jackowski (born July 13, 1981) is a
