Readerâ s: Online Exegesis to Uncover Secrets. McQuate, K. (2001). The Great Tribulation and the Transformation of the Kingdom (Paperback)Â .Haena Bay Haena Bay is the name of the historic bay located in the northwest coast of the Hawaiian island of Kauai. The bay is located in the mauka shore of the island, just north of Makua beach, and the name has been applied to the village of Haena, the county seat of Kauai County, and to various beaches and points along the shore. History The earliest known use of the name in English was Haena Bay, dating from the first ship visiting Hawaii in 1776. This name was given to a prominent landmark in the bay. The bay was named by James Cook after his ship HMS Haena. The Spanish explorer Juan Galleo was told that he had served as an escort for the explorer, and the Hawaiian King, Kamehameha I, had commanded a detachment of soldiers in the hunt for Captain James Cook. During his visit, Cook saw the dunes along the shore of the bay and named them Pohaku Dunes. After Cook's departure, the bay was a haunt of pirates and smugglers operating under the protection of King Kamehameha I. The bay and its surroundings along the Napali Coast were the site of confrontations between the British and Americans during the latter's War of 1812. Napali was a village in the Makaa district of the island that was razed in 1812 during a conflict between the British and the Americans. Its name is of Native Hawaiian origin and means "princely house". In the 20th century, Haena Bay became a popular destination for surfers from around the world. The surf is usually good, with many surfing contests being held at the Bay throughout the year. The body of Hawaiian royalty Michael Okoleau was found along the shore at this bay after an assassination attempt on him which caused a boat accident. Today The majority of Haena Bay is privately owned, but a portion remains in public ownership. The largest landowners in the area are the Nature Conservancy and the federal government. The town of Haena has a population of about 1,500, which includes approximately 200 employees of the U.S. Marine Corps. Kauai County, headquarters for the island, also has a population of 1
