In several cases, the treatment may be due to the patient's or caregiver's personal choice. The WHO STEPs Survey does not ask about the treatment preference for a specific condition. Moreover, the stepwise treatment approach is very cumbersome and for those targeted in-depth interviews, the clinician would have to ask about their treatment preferences for specific conditions. Therefore, we have assumed that a patient's treatment choice is independent of their initial diagnosis and that treatment choice is not associated with the condition the patient is diagnosed with. When interviewers note that a patient chose not to follow through with their diagnosis (this does occur), that patient is categorised as having no diagnosis. Patients without a diagnosis are considered patients who chose not to follow through with their diagnosis because they think it does not matter. The evaluation of the effectiveness of the treatment was performed using DASH, SPADI, VAS and ODI scores. We used a graphical analysis to evaluate the performance of the software. These scores were collected by the same physiotherapist, who was blinded to the software evaluated. 5ec8ef588b
