The original trilogy was released nearly 30 years ago; over the years, fans have recounted their love for the series all over the internet, contributing to a now-legendary fan culture around the original movies. The sequel trilogy has been the source of some hope for fans, with George Lucas saying he was ready to start working on it. Now, we're getting some good news: StarWars.com has reported that the sequel trilogy has a title. The name of the movie is Star Wars Episode VII: The Force Awakens, and according to the report, is just the beginning of a new era of storytelling in the new era of the Star Wars Universe. A post to StarWars.com (via StarWarsBr.com) reads: "I really don't know, to be honest with you," says Abrams when asked whether he has finally settled on what his story will be about when he comes to start directing the new Star Wars: Episode VII. "[There are] all these threads, all these clues, sitting out there in the world. And the question, what really defines this time? We will be able to answer that question as soon as we sit down and have a story conference. I'm sure that will be one of the things that we'll explore." "What we have in a crazy way in terms of the experience of shooting all those films, the production design, the sound, the wardrobe, the actors, everything else that happened -- I think that all of that is, in a way, a catalyst for us -- but I think it's really, I think, a pivotal chapter in the larger story of
